

Sirui Liao is a graphic designer and illustrator who travel back and forth between Hunan, China and Brooklyn, New York. She will be graduating from the communication department (graphic design focus) from Pratt Institute in May 2020.

Liao believes that design is always a form of expression, whether it is a self-investigation or a brand voice. For better connecting with her own cultural context and also to access a broader audience, she dedicates in bilingual design.

With previous working experience in publication, Liao is skilled at traditional print designs as well as promotional motion graphic designs. Other than that, Liao thinks conceptually, and curious about what could graphic design be when imaging the alternative circumstances. (the B side of design, Dunne & Raby: A/B, A Manifesto, 2009)

Liao loves to feel and to make things with her hands as much as with a computer and a mouse.
